1.2.0 The Origin, Growth and Spread of Kiswahili in the World

1.2.1 The origin of Kiswahili

The name "Swahili" comes from the Arabic word, sawahil, the plural of sahil . In the coast areas it means "coastal dwellers". The prefix ki – is attached to nouns in the noun class that includes languages, so Kiswahili means "coastal language".

Kiswahili includes quite a bit of vocabulary of Arabic origin as a result of contact with Arabic – speaking traders and inhabitants of the Swahili coast, such as the coastal areas of Kenya, Msumbiji, Tanzania and Islands such as Zanzibar and Comoros. Besides, there are also words of German, Portuguese, English, Hindi and French origin in Kiswahili due to contact with traders, slavers and colonial officials. Currently, Kiswahili has many words derived or coined from the vocabulary of the main tribes in the Kiswahili-speaking countries of Africa.

1.2.2 A Bantu language

Essentially, Kiswahili is a Bantu language, spoken mainly in Tanzania, Kenya, Uganda, Burundi, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Rwanda, Comoro, Mayotte, Mozambique, Oman, Somalia, South Africa, South Sudan, U.S.A, United Arab Emirates etc.

1.2.3 The spread of Kiswahili

Kiswahili is spoken by 5 million people as a native language and a further 135 million speak it as a second language. Kiswahili is an official language in Tanzania, Kenya, Rwanda and Uganda, and is used as a lingua franca throughout East Africa. Majority people in Tanzania and Kenya speak Kiswahili as a second language to their so- called mother languages which are fast giving way to Kiswahili. The language is being taught in primary and secondary schools as a compulsory language in most of the countries of East Africa. Many Universities around the world now teach Kiswahili as a foreign language and momentum is growing daily. So are major Radio and TV stations in many countries in the world. Kiswahili is now accepted as an official language in many international and regional conferences, meetings etc. Kiswahili is also an official language for the African Parliament, East Africa Community Assembly, the African Union Assembly and the United Nations Assembly.

1.2.4 The first Kiswahili newspaper

The first Kiswahili newspaper, Habari ya Mwezi, was published by Missionaries in 1895.

1.2.5 First writings of Kiswahili

Kiswahili was first written in 1711 AD and the writing system was Arabic script and Latin script. The earliest known pieces of writing, in the Arabic script are letters dating from 1711 AD, and the earliest known manuscript, a poetic epic entitled Utendi wa Tambuka (The History of Tambuka) dates from 1728.

1.2.6 A language of colonial administration in East Africa

During the 19th century, Kiswahili was used as the main language of administration by the European colonial powers in East Africa and under their influence the Latin alphabet was increasingly used to write it.

1.2.7 Ranking of Kiswahili in the World

Kiswahili is the second language spoken by many people in Africa. It is the 10th out of 6,000 languages spoken by many people in the world.

THE KISWAHILI ALPHABET AND PRONUNCIATION

2.1.0 The Kiswahili Alphabet

2.1.1 The number of letters in Kiswahili alphabet

The alphabet of Kiswahili has 31 letters. Unlike English alphabet, the Kiswahili alphabet does not contains the letters Q or X whose sounds are missing from this language. There are two other differences:

- Kiswahili language has the letter CH in place of the letter C.
- Unlike English language, Kiswahili has only one sound associated with each other. For instance, the letter G always sounds like the G in G*ift* and in G*ender.*

It is easy to learn Kiswahili language, especially when it comes to pronunciation. Almost all Kiswahili words are pronounced the way they are written. The vowel sounds and syllables are always pronounced the same way in every Kiswahili word.

If you want to learn Kiswahili, it is very fundamental to start doing so by learning Kiswahili alphabet and memorizing its letters as a guide to the language.

2.2.0 PRONUNCIATION GUIDE

Kiswahili pronunciation is very easy. In this section, you will learn how syllables are constructed in Kiswahili and how to pronounce them. We'll start our lesson with vowels.

2.2.1 Vowels

Vowels are the most important building blocks of most Kiswahili syllables. Kiswahili language has five vowels which always are pronounced the same, regardless of stress as follows:

Vowels	Pronounced as a	Algeria
e	egg
i	India
o	orange
u	udder

These five vowels are the same as in English, but, are pronounced a little differently. In every Kiswahili word, the vowels make exactly the same sounds. As an example, in English, the vowel "e" sounds differently in words "Peter" and "elephant," it is not like that in Kiswahili. Vowel "e" in every word sounds like "e" as in "elephant."

2.2.2 Syllables

Syllables in Kiswahili are made of vowels alone, or combinations of consonants and vowels with the exception of letters "m" and "n" which form syllables just by themselves in some words e.g. "mtu", "nchi." Kiswahili speakers don't like "hanging consonants," that's consonants that are not followed by vowels. For this reason, the name "John" with a hanging "n", people will call you "Joni" with a vowel "i" added at the end. The name, "Rose" with a hanging

"z" sound people will call you "Rozi". The Arabic name "Salim" becomes "Salimu". However, there are common consonants that are forgiven to appear in a "hanging" state are "f", "k", "l", "m", "n", and "s", appearing in the middle. Example are "afya", "maktaba", "almasi", "mamlaka", "mantiki", and "mstari".

2.2.3 Letters that make same sound as in English

In Kiswahili, letter combination "ch", and letters "k", "p", and "t" have two distinct sound formats. One format is "light" and the other is "heavy". The "light" format is the same as in English. That is, "ch" as in "chat", "k" as in "keep", "p" as in "put", and "t" as in "take".

Examples of "heavy" formats in English are "chat", not "chat"; "keep", not "keep"; "put", not "put"; "take", not "take". However, in Kiswahili both two sound formats exist and give different meanings to words that have same spellings. Examples are:

NAMBA NA HESABU - NUMBERS AND ARITHMETIC

25.1 Uandishi wa namba kwa Kiswahili na Kiingereza - Writing Numbers in Kiswahili and English

Ni rahisi kutamka namba katika Kiswahili. Ukishajua namna ya kusema 0, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 20, 30, 40, 50, 60, 70, 80, 90, 100, na 1,000,000, unaweza kusema namba yoyote. Hii ni kwa sababu namba nyingine ni muunganiko wa namba zilizotajwa hapo juu - Numbers in Kiswahili are very easy to say. Once you know how to say 0, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 20, 30, 40, 50, 60, 70, 80, 90, 100, and 1,000,000, you should be able to say any other (practical) number. This is because the other numbers are spoken combinations of the above mentioned numbers.

For example, 1823, is "elfu moja mia nane ishirini na tatu," which is an exact literal translation, one thoudand eight hundred twenty three. The only (minor) difference here is the addition of "na" which means and, between the Kiswahili word for twenty (ishirini) and three (tatu) in Kiswahili, "na" is always added between tens and unit digits. There are a few other twists.

Of course you also need to know how to say fractional and decimal numbers as well as percentages. Kiswahili speakers also have a habit of using a number called "laki" which is 100,000. So, number in hundreds of thousand are alternatively spoken using "laki." For example 246,176 can be spoken as "mia mbili arubaini na sita elfu, mia moja sabini na sita," or alternatively, "laki mbili arubaini na sita elfu, mia moja sabini na sita." Both forms are correct.
